of ancient Art, he was compelled to believe and to say that ancient artists were great, because they never failed to study the spirit of their time. And the American Art-Union has adopted and acted upon this principle from the start; that American Art, to be successful, must spring from deep study and devotion to the spirit of the age in which we live. It has sought to encourage Art in every part of the United States, and has welcomed every agency that has sprung up in aid of this great endeavor. We have welcomed artists wherever found. So also whenever institutions have sprung up, devoted to American Art, we have welcomed them as belonging to the same sisterhood with ourselves. And whenever similar institutions have organized in Philadelphia, in Boston, in Newark, or any other part of the country, we have stood ready to bid them God speed, and to aid them in every possible way in the work in which we are all engaged. We have had no sectional feeling, no party bias, no narrow jealousy of any kind, but have welcomed them all to the higher circle of laborers in the cause of American Art. With these views I ask permission to give as a sentiment—Prosperity to the Art-Union of Philadelphia.

To this toast Mr. SILL of Philadelphia responded. The compliment which had been paid the Art-Union of Philadelphia, was quite unexpected; and though not now connected with the management, he had yet served long in its behalf, and should always feel a deep interest in its welfare. They had tried to do their duty in a small way in Philadelphia. They had been encouraged by the signal success of the Art-Union in New-York, and they hoped at some day, not far distant, to approach that institution in the excellence as well as the number of their works. He believed that Art-Unions had done great good in raising the character of Art in this country, and in making works of Art more generally known. There was a close connection between the Fine Arts and the Useful Arts, and as long as the former flourished, the latter would prosper also. He had seen with great pleasure the welcome extended to LEUTZE. You do well, said he, to honor him. He deserves all you can do or say on his behalf. But we claim him also. We think he belongs peculiarly to Philadelphia. It was there he first displayed his ability—he first developed his genius there. It gives me great pleasure to learn the high object for which he has now returned. He desires to establish a school of Art here which shall do honor to the country. This is an object in which we all have an equal interest. It is a national object, one which will tend to raise the Arts in this country to an equal standing with schools abroad. I hope that the design of LEUTZE will be highly successful, and that he may be able to carry his noble purposes into complete fulfillment. Mr. SILL closed by giving as a toast, The Fine Arts in America—presages of a new birth upon this continent; may it eclipse in the nineteenth century the renaissance of the fifteenth.

The President soon after toasted THE PRESS to which Mr THOMPSON, Editor of The Southern Literary Messenger, briefly responded. He expressed his gratitude for being thus called upon in a strange city, and said that the duty belonged rather to some member of the Press of New-York City—confessedly the ablest and the best in the United States.

A sentiment on the Literature of America, led to calls for Dr. R. W. GRISWOLD, who made some excellent and acceptable remarks concerning the late Mr. COOPER, as a friend of Art, and as himself, in one department, the greatest artist America had produced. Dr. G. said, that in a chapter of a work not yet published, Mr. COOPER predicted, that the greatest triumph of America would hereafter be, not in politics, nor in civil affairs, but in the world of Art.

Mr. PARKE GODWIN being loudly called upon, made some excellent remarks upon Art, as transcending Nature. and not as the copyist and imitator of it. He fortified his opinion on this point by numerous illustrations and analogies.

At about 11 o'clock the company separated.

THE ENGRAVING OF THE SERIES OF THE VOYAGE OF LIFE, BY COLE.

Our readers will recollect that Youth, the second picture of this series, was engraved by the Art-Union for distribution among the members of 1849. Numerous letters have been addressed to the Committee urging the completion of the series by engraving the three remaining pictures. We are enabled to state, for the satisfaction of those interested in the subject, that this matter is under advisement, and some action will probably be taken in relation to it before long.
